Boreway Brazed Metal Magnet Holder Braze For Welding Core Bit Segment On Core Barrels
Braze for welding segment on core barrels tools is used for precise retipping core drill bit segment on the steel barrel or tube, increasing the welding precision and ensure the best performance of the core drill bit.

Generally speaking, the thickness of segments should be at least 1.5mm thicker than the steel barrel. There are four different side tolerances to adjust according to the thickness difference between segment and steel tube.

Braze for welding segment on core barrels tools are made of strong N35EH neodymium magnet with strong magnitism and high resistance for heat. Besides, four different side tolerances are marked a, b, c, d in different positions, which make the whole retipping work easily and precisely.

Product Specifications:

Normally when brazing the segment,the rule is:
Inner side clearance=(segment width-steel core width)x0.4
Outer side clearance=(segment width-steel core width)x0.4
Following is the reference for the braze for welding segment on core barrels tools size and steel core width for different diameter:
